

Preliminary Program

for the IAAP/Catholic University Freiburg Joint Conference
(in cooperation with German Society for Analytical Psychology (DGAP) and International Network for Research in Analytical Psychology INFAP3)

„The Process of Transformation“

Catholic University Freiburg, Germany; 4-6 Oct. 2024

The conference theme

Jung started to develop his own approach to psychodynamic psychotherapy with the idea (in his 1912 publication “Wandlungen und Symbole der Libido”, in which the term “Wandlung” = transformation is highlighted) that there is a universal process taking place in the transformation of the personality. Since then, in analytical psychology, the general idea is that the process of psychotherapy is directed by inner forces (e.g. the transcendent function, the archetype of the Self) which are activated in the therapeutic encounter. There is also the idea that this process has a universal shape and can be mapped accordingly. Moments of change or turning points in the course of therapy are facilitated by the appearance of archetypal patterns or symbols. This process is called the individuation process and its general form and stages have been described in Jung’s works in detail. This process forms the core of Jung’s psychology and continues to be the heart of analytical psychology. The attempt to map this process in its universal form is the reason behind Jung’s interest in alchemy, mythology (the hero’s journey) and spiritual traditions, because in all of these fields traces of this process can be found. This process has been described again and again in publications from the field of analytical psychology and in a large number of case descriptions. Nevertheless, in spite of the outstanding importance for analytical psychology, there have been few attempts to investigate this process systematically and in accordance with the rules and instruments of scientific research. The basic idea of all approaches to psychotherapy is to create conditions which bring about therapeutic change. The different schools of psychotherapy differ largely in how they explain the coming about of therapeutic change and the factors behind it. A major aim of the conference is to provide a forum for researchers to come together and have an exchange on how to approach the investigation of the process of transformation in different fields as well as to present their findings. This forum is not restricted to Analytical Psychology but will include other disciplines, especially psychodynamic psychotherapies and general psychotherapy process research.

The idea is to have a working conference in the sense that not only completed studies and findings can be presented but also research approaches and designs and these can be discussed together with other researchers regarding their applicability to the investigation of transformation processes. In this sense, the conference should also provide a space for discussion, co operation and networking in the development of appropriate research approaches for analytical psychology in the future.

Friday, Oct 4th

13:00 Reception open: Arrival and registration.

14:00 Welcome by the presidents/representatives of IAAP (Misser Berg), DGAP (Dieter Treu), INFAP3 (Isabelle Meier/Elisabeth Schörry-Volk) and Catholic University (Christian Roesler)

Lecture: Introduction to the conference theme “The process of transformation”
(Prof. Dr. Christian Roesler, Freiburg/Germany)

Keynote lecture: A New Cure of Souls: On the Transformation of Jung's therapeutic practice
(Prof. Dr. Sonu Shamdasani, London/UK)

16:00 Coffee Break

16:30 Parallel Breakout-Sessions: Conceptual research and research designs
(30 min. for each presentation including Q/A and discussion)

Session A

Antje Barber, Berlin/Germany: Specificities of the transpersonal - from Neumann to Ferrer
Results of hermeneutic research as a stimulus for the clarification of epistemological foundations

19:30 A musical improvisation performed by Tallis Vocal Ensemble

Saturday Oct 5th

9:30 Spiritual Transformation

A universal process of transformation can also be found in spiritual traditions, e.g. the exercises of Ignatius of Loyola, the Buddhist path etc. This section of the conference will provide a forum for investigations into these traditions.

Keynote Lecture: The Spiritual Path of Transformation

(Prof. Dr. Eckhard Frick, Jesuit Priest and Jungian Analyst, Anthropological Psychology/University for Philosophy and Spiritual Care/Technical University, Munich/Germany)

10:45 Parallel Breakout-Sessions: Spiritual and transpersonal transformation processes
(30 min. for each presentation including Q/A and discussion)

Session A

Patrizia Peresso, Rome/Italy: A preliminary study on the transformative process: an analyst and a Catholic priest compare their views

Dawn Bunch, Pittsburgh/USA: Exploring the Imaginative Path toward Salvation and Individuation through St. Teresa of Avila and C.G. Jung

Session B

Liane Hofmann, IGPP Freiburg/Germany: Kundalini processes

Wolfgang Fach, IGPP Freiburg/Germany: Autonomy and Bonding as Structural Determinants of Individuation and Exceptional Experiences

Session C

Eckhard Frick, München/Germany: Godplaying – a psychodramatic experience (workshop)

11:45 Coffee/Tea

12:15 The Spiritual Path of Transformation in the Symbolism of Gothic Cathedrals

The Gothic cathedrals of Central Europe (Freiburg Cathedral as an outstanding example) are covered - outside as well as inside - with symbols in the form of sculptures and paintings, which form an iconographic program delivering the Christian path to salvation and thus providing an example of a path of transformation (therefore called the biblia pauperum, the Bible of the poor/illiterate). But this official symbolism is only one layer of the symbolism contained in the Cathedral as a whole. Beneath this official layer of symbolism are more secret layers, including signs and symbols attached to the church by the guild of stonemasons, who formed a secret society and provided a path of initiation; remnants of pagan beliefs; finally, there is the hypothesis that alchemical symbols are attached to the church which can be read as a path of initiation/transformation according to the ideas of medieval alchemy.

Introduction to official and secret layers of symbolism in the Freiburg Cathedral

(Christian Roesler, Freiburg/Germany in cooperation with Brigit Soubroulliard, Strasbourg/France)

13:00 Lunch Break

Excursion to the Freiburg Cathedral (15 min. walk) and visit of the market around the cathedral; lunch on the market with typical specialties of the region
